MIDRASH WITH THE RABBI-Knowledge for the believer

The argument for converted or completed?

Apparently today a small number of believing Jewish teachers have objections when it comes to Jewish followers of the Messiah saying that they are NOT converts to Christianity, but are more or less completed in their Jewish faith (1). But what does any of this mean? Or is this really even an issue to squabble over? The New King James bible uses the word convert (2) which some Jewish teachers believe is a proper concept for being born again. The only problem with this NKJ translation is that it defines the definition as "noting a specified type of person who has been converted from the religion, beliefs, or attitudes characteristic of that type." This definition points out that conversion really means a leaving or changing of one's belief or religion to join another. Now some may think that the Messiah invented Christianity and that he reinvented a new religion when the fact is that he did NOT. The truth is that he died for peoples sins not for a religion. Being born again means to turn away from sin and unbelief and be changed inward not (3).....

Do Jewish people think there are no more Prophets?

Inspirational Reading

In this month I would like to address our question in the following way. Now depending on what position a Jewish person believes about this is his or hers personal answer. If we were to address this question in a generalized way we would say, don't all Jewish people think that there are no prophets? This generalized questioning is most certainly false, because not all Jewish people would say or agree to this. If we asked a Hasidic/Orthodox Jewish person the same question they may answer that they believe that G-d still uses people to be a Prophet if needed. While others conservative or reformed on the issue may say we don't believe in prophets today or at all, while a non practicing Jewish person would admit he or they have no clue at all or care about the matter. As I heard a Christian pastor share one day that the rabbi's as in all don't believe in modern prophets based on a belief that Malachi the prophet is the last of the Old Testament prophets. Actually the last of the Old Testament prophets ended with Yohanan-John the immerser (a). He was the last of the Old Testament Prophets of Israel. Whether Jewish people then or today reject him as such he is the last of (OT) prophets. While the book of Malachi or Malachi the prophet is the last of the Minor Prophets I seriously doubt that all Jewish people think that there will be no more prophets because we surly cannot speculate what most Jewish people are.....
